Of the twenty-three per cent who remained the same, -- had been in the open air schools during the one to two years preceding and had been maintaining an average of over ninety per cent. In attendance, the records cover two hundred and four children; 63 per cent gained, 7 per cent remained the same, and 30 per cent lost. In connection with the apparently large number--nearly one third--whose attendance percentages were less than those of the previous year, --such records as these, which, of course, had to be placed among the losses, are significant. It is further interesting to note that the percentage of attendance for 1911-12 ran 94, 90, 96, 95 per cent for the open air schools,...
