Right at the beginning of this process called European Integration, a common agricultural policy which supports, regulates and protects the European agricultural market was introduced. The ancient reason for its establishment was the desolate food supply situation in Europe after the Second World War. As society and economy has been damaged by years of wars, the agriculture had been crippled and nearly all European states were dependant of food imports . In open competition, countrymen suffered huge changes in quantity and prices, which yield to an unsteady and under average in-come as well as an unsecure food supply for consumers . The agrarian market was supposed to failure without governmental intervention . In order to achieve a stable self-supply of affordable food and a better agricultural productivity , the European agriculture was taken out of the regulation system of a free market economy and the common agricultural policy (CAP) came into force 1962. 24 pp. Englisch.
