Since 1972 the Coastal Zone Management Act has enabled coastal states to manage and develop their environments and resources in a sound, sustainable manner. However, as noted in the U. S. Commission on Ocean Policys final report, the increasing pressures facing our coastal regions continue to evolve in scope and complexity. For example, non-point source pollution has become the primary cause of nutrient loading, hypoxia, harmful algal blooms, and environmental toxins in coastal waters. Development and sprawl in the coastal zone compounds this problem and puts additional pressures on habitats and infrastructure. This hearing today is a critical step toward addressing these growing challenges. Today we will hear about ways to better support local coordination and planning efforts, fund essential new coastal research, and resolve funding disparities that currently exist under this Act. Yet most of the legislation does not need to be amended. The Act has established a remarkably successful State-Federal framework for coastal zone management, and we must ensure it continues to do so. For instance, 34 states volunteer to participate in the Acts program to develop coastal zone management plans custom- tailored to their individual needs. Once a plan is Federally approved, matching funds are available to help each state implement its plan, and these states are able to review and approve any Federal action off their shores. This consistency requirement fosters much-needed collaboration between local, State, and Federal governments. My bill would uphold the grant programs and consistency rules of the original Act, but it also seeks to expand funding...
