CROUCH The particular fascination of Mr. A. P. Crouch s new story is that the scene of its operations is placed in that weird, mysterious land, Tibet. A young Englishman of the self-reliant, strong, and adventurous type determines to visit Lhasa-the sacred Tibetan capital-a city which the foreigner is not allowed to explore upon pain of death. How the Englishman succeeds in his object, and how he brings back with him A Wife from the Forbidden Land, is the function of the story to tell. Mr. Crouch knows the peoples of the wonderful East like a native; and his book is not only an engrossing romance: it is a vivid presentment of the customs, institutions, and manners of a land which is as yet but little known to the European. -Publisher s Notice [1907] Now and again in these days of cheap psychology and novels of small incident, it is a pleasure to find a book like this-a book which is simply and avowedly a straightforward...
